McGraw-Hill Construction is pleased to announce the Interoperability Roundtable (IRT) Luncheon program at ENR's Top Firm Leaders Forum June 14-15. The luncheon will begin at 12:45PM on the second day of the forum, June 15.

The Interoperability Roundtable Luncheon will launch McGraw-Hill Construction's new industry-wide initiative to define and measure the business benefits of interoperability, and capture and publish the improved business processes that are enabled by greater interoperability on projects.

At this kick-off Luncheon a live panel of construction industry thought-leaders will share their views about the critical importance of improved interoperability, and you will be introduced to the first wave of findings from McGraw-Hill Research that will serve as the foundation for a comprehensive ongoing research project to define what it means to be interoperable in construction.

Who will and should attend? Executives and managers from contracting firms, design firms, construction management firms and industry associations – plus project owners, developers, and technology and service suppliers. Anyone who will profit from the benefits that greater interoperability will bring to the industry.

The MHC Interoperability Roundtable will be captured on video and broadcast on ENR.com and Construction.com, and a summary report of thought leaders' commentary and research findings will be published in ENR's June 26 issue's Special Section on Interoperability.
